❤ Happy Birthday, Mythu! ❤

A Letter From My Heart to Someone Who Means So Much to Me

Dear Mythu, ❤

First of all, Happy Birthday, Mythu! ❤

On your special day, I wish you lots of happiness, peace, good health, success, and countless beautiful moments in your life. May God bless you and your family abundantly, guide you in everything you do, and fill your life with love, joy, and blessings. I hope this new year of your life brings you everything your heart has been hoping for.

Today is your birthday, and I wanted to give you something more meaningful than an ordinary birthday wish. I wanted to write a letter expressing what's been in my heart about our friendship, the things I've been thinking about, the misunderstandings we've experienced, and what I genuinely hope for us in the future.

I don't know whether I'll be able to express every feeling perfectly through words, but I want you to know that everything I've written here comes from my heart.

Please read this letter whenever you have time, with a calm mind. You don't have to rush through it. I simply want to share my feelings with you honestly.

❤ Our Friendship Means a Lot to Me

Mythu, sometimes I wonder how two people who care about each other can end up misunderstanding and hurting each other.

Neither of us may have intended for things to become this complicated. Sometimes, one misunderstanding leads to another. Feelings remain unspoken, assumptions take the place of conversations, and little things slowly become bigger than they should have been.

Eventually, the things we never properly discussed become difficult to ignore.

There have been moments when I've wondered whether we'll be okay after everything that has happened. I've wondered whether things will become normal again and whether we'll be able to talk, laugh, share things, and enjoy our friendship without feeling that something has changed between us.

It's not that I expect our friendship to be perfect. It's just that this friendship means a lot to me, and I don't want misunderstandings to become the reason we stop understanding each other.

I don't want us to hurt each other simply because we failed to understand what the other person was trying to say.

I value the memories we've created, the conversations we've shared, the moments we've laughed together, and all the little things that have made this friendship meaningful to me.

Sometimes, we may not realise how much we appreciate the ordinary moments until something difficult happens between us.

I'm not grateful for the misunderstandings or the hurt we've experienced. But I hope we can learn something meaningful from them and become better at understanding each other.

❤ Understanding Each Other

Mythu, I've realised that two people can experience the same friendship from two different perspectives.

Something that seems small to me might hurt you deeply. Something you do without any bad intention might make me overthink. Sometimes, I might understand your words differently from how you intended them, and sometimes, you might misunderstand mine too.

We may both believe we're right because we're looking at the situation from our own perspectives.

But maybe the answer isn't always about proving who is right and who is wrong.

Maybe sometimes, the answer is to stop defending ourselves for a moment and genuinely listen to each other.

I know there have been times when I've wanted to explain my intentions immediately instead of first understanding how my actions made you feel.

My first thought might have been, "But that's not what I meant."

However, I'm learning that even if my intention wasn't to hurt you, your feelings still matter.

If something I've done has hurt you, I want to understand why it hurt you rather than simply explain why I did it.

I don't want to dismiss your feelings just because I see the situation differently.

I also know that I have my own feelings, fears, and misunderstandings. Sometimes, I struggle to express them properly. Sometimes, I overthink situations, make assumptions, or allow my emotions to influence how I react.

I'm not saying these things to justify my mistakes. I'm saying them because I want to recognise them and learn from them.

I want to become better at understanding you, just as I hope we can continue learning to understand each other.

❤ If I've Hurt You, Please Tell Me

Mythu, I want you to know something important.

If I've done something wrong, please tell me.

If I've hurt you, tell me honestly.

If something I've said or done has upset you, don't feel that you have to hide your feelings just to avoid an uncomfortable conversation.

You can tell me when I'm wrong. You can correct me. You can disagree with me. You can tell me that you didn't like something I did.

I may not always understand everything immediately, and I might need some time to process what you're telling me. But I want to learn to listen without immediately becoming defensive.

I don't want you to feel that you must remain silent about something that's bothering you.

I'd rather know that I've made a mistake and have an opportunity to learn from it than unknowingly keep doing something that hurts you.

I also understand that saying sorry isn't enough if the same behaviour continues.

A genuine apology means recognising what went wrong, understanding how it affected the other person, and making a sincere effort to handle things differently next time.

I want my actions to reflect what I'm learning, not just the words I write in this letter.

I hope we can both give each other the opportunity to learn, grow, and become better at handling difficult situations.

I don't expect either of us to be perfect. I simply hope we can acknowledge our mistakes honestly and make an effort to improve.

❤ Please, Don't Choose Silence When We Have a Problem

Mythu, this is one of the most important things I want to tell you.

If any problem or misunderstanding comes between us in the future, I want us to talk about it and try to resolve it instead of allowing silence to create more misunderstandings.

If I make a mistake, please tell me.

If you're angry with me, tell me.

If I've hurt your feelings, explain what I've done.

If you disagree with me, let's discuss it.

And if you're so angry that you feel like shouting at me, scolding me, or fighting with me, then please tell me everything that's bothering you.

You can shout at me, scold me, fight with me, and even beat me if you're that angry with me 😂, but please don't go silent without giving us a chance to talk things through.

I'm not saying this because I want you to be angry with me or because I want us to keep fighting. I'm saying it because I'd rather face an uncomfortable conversation with you than be left wondering what went wrong between us.

I'd rather hear you tell me directly that I've hurt you than have you hide your feelings and allow misunderstandings to grow.

I'd rather have you correct me when I'm wrong than have you feel that you cannot tell me what's bothering you.

Even if we argue, I hope we can eventually sit down, talk honestly, listen to each other's perspectives, and try to understand what happened.

If a problem comes between us, let's face the problem together instead of allowing the problem to come between us.

We don't have to agree on everything. We don't have to understand everything in the same way. And we don't have to solve every problem immediately.

But I hope we can remember that communication matters, especially when things become difficult.

If either of us needs some time to calm down, that's okay. We can take that time and talk when we're ready.

I don't expect you to respond immediately whenever something happens, and I understand that sometimes people need space to process their feelings.

I just hope that, when we're ready, we can return to the conversation instead of leaving important things unresolved.

I don't want us to be afraid of talking to each other just because we might disagree. I want us to learn how to disagree without losing our ability to understand each other.

❤ I Don't Expect Us to Be Perfect

I've realised that strong friendships aren't necessarily friendships that never experience misunderstandings.

Sometimes, even people who care deeply about each other make mistakes. They misunderstand each other's words, react emotionally, or fail to recognise how their actions affect the other person.

What matters is what they choose to do afterwards.

Do they acknowledge their mistakes?

Do they listen to each other?

Do they apologise sincerely?

Do they try to change the things that caused the hurt?

Do they give each other the opportunity to explain their feelings?

These are the things I want us to learn.

I don't expect us to fix everything in one conversation. I understand that trust sometimes needs rebuilding, certain feelings need time, and some misunderstandings cannot be resolved simply by saying a few words.

But I believe we can make progress if we are both willing to communicate honestly and treat each other with respect.

There might be uncomfortable conversations. There might be moments when we don't immediately understand each other. There might even be times when we need to step back and think before responding.

That's okay.

What I hope is that we won't allow those moments to make us forget the importance of treating each other with kindness.

I don't want a perfect friendship, Mythu. I want an honest friendship where we can acknowledge our mistakes, express our feelings, and learn to handle things better.

❤ I'm Learning to Trust and Understand You

I also want to be honest about something within myself.

Sometimes, I overthink things.

Sometimes, I allow my fears to influence how I interpret a situation.

Sometimes, when something feels different, I start wondering whether something is wrong, even when I might not have all the information I need.

I recognise that this is something I need to work on.

I don't want to keep making assumptions when I could simply communicate with you.

I want to learn to trust your words instead of repeatedly allowing my doubts to create unnecessary worries.

I want to understand that you have your own life, responsibilities, feelings, and priorities.

You don't have to be available every moment, respond to every message immediately, or explain every little thing to prove that our friendship matters.

I understand that you may sometimes be tired, busy, or simply need time for yourself.

And I want to respect that.

I want to care about our friendship without allowing my fear of losing it to interfere with the peace and understanding we both deserve.

I don't want you to feel pressured by my emotions. I want to become better at expressing those emotions in a healthy way.

I want to give you room to be yourself while also learning to communicate my own feelings more clearly.

I know that change takes time, and I cannot promise that I'll never overthink anything again.

But I can sincerely try to recognise when I'm doing it, question my assumptions, and handle my feelings more maturely.

That's something I want to work on for myself as well as for the way I treat the people who matter to me.

❤ Our Friendship Means More Than Our Misunderstandings

Mythu, I value the memories we've created, the conversations we've shared, the moments we've laughed together, and all the ordinary little things that have made this friendship meaningful to me.

I'm not grateful for the times we've hurt each other. I'm not saying that the misunderstandings were necessary or that we should pretend they didn't matter.

But I hope we can learn something from what happened.

I hope we can become more honest with each other.

I hope we can learn to listen more carefully.

I hope we can express our feelings without making assumptions about what the other person means.

And I hope we can acknowledge the difficult parts of our friendship instead of pretending they never existed.

Because a meaningful friendship doesn't have to be beautiful every single day.

Sometimes, it can be complicated. Sometimes, it can be uncomfortable. Sometimes, two people who care about each other can struggle to understand one another.

But those moments don't have to define the entire friendship.

We can acknowledge what went wrong without forgetting everything that went right.

We can recognise our mistakes without treating each other as though those mistakes are the only things that matter.

We can learn from the past without allowing it to determine every conversation we have in the future.

And we can choose to communicate better, even when doing so requires patience and effort.

❤ What I Hope for Us Going Forward

I hope we can create a friendship where both of us feel comfortable expressing our feelings.

A friendship where we can say, "This hurt me," without fearing that the conversation will turn into another misunderstanding.

A friendship where we can say, "I made a mistake," without feeling that we have to defend ourselves.

A friendship where we can disagree, take time to calm down, and return to the conversation with a willingness to understand each other.

A friendship where apologies are sincere and changes are reflected in our actions.

A friendship where neither of us has to pretend to be okay when something is bothering us.

And a friendship where we respect each other's boundaries, personal responsibilities, and need for space.

I don't expect us to agree on everything or react perfectly in every situation.

I just hope that when something goes wrong, we will remember that we can talk about it.

We don't have to let one misunderstanding become another, and we don't have to let an argument turn into a wall of silence.

If we need to talk, let's talk.

If we need to apologise, let's apologise.

If we need time, let's give each other time.

If something needs to change, let's be honest about it.

And if we misunderstand each other again, let's try to understand what happened instead of immediately assuming the worst.

I want us to learn from our experiences rather than repeat the same patterns.

I want us to become better at handling difficult conversations rather than avoiding them out of fear.

Most importantly, I hope we can both feel that our perspectives matter and that we can express them without disrespecting one another.

❤ One Last Thing, Mythu

I'm not writing this letter because I expect everything to become perfect after you read it.

I'm not expecting you to forget the past, immediately change your feelings, or give me a particular response.

I simply wanted to share what has been on my mind and what I hope we can learn from everything we've experienced.

I know that a friendship cannot be maintained by one person's feelings alone. It takes mutual understanding, respect, communication, and effort.

I cannot decide how you should feel, and I cannot expect you to see every situation the way I do.

All I can do is take responsibility for my part, listen to your perspective, and try to become better at the way I communicate with you.

I hope you can do the same whenever you feel ready.

If we have another disagreement in the future, I hope we won't immediately think that everything we've built has been ruined.

Instead, I hope we'll remember that disagreements can be discussed, mistakes can be acknowledged, and misunderstandings can sometimes be resolved when both people are willing to listen.

Mythu, if I make a mistake, please tell me. If I'm wrong, correct me. If I've hurt you, help me understand it. Shout at me, scold me, argue with me, and even beat me 😂, but please don't feel that silence is the only way to deal with a problem between us.

I'd rather have an honest conversation, even if it's uncomfortable, than allow assumptions to grow when we could have talked about them.

I don't want us to be afraid of difficult conversations.

I want us to learn how to have them with honesty, patience, and respect.

And I want to remember that both of us are human. We can make mistakes, misunderstand each other, and sometimes react in ways we later wish we had handled differently.

What matters is whether we are willing to recognise those moments and learn from them.

If a problem comes between us, let's solve the problem together instead of allowing it to become a problem between us.

We cannot change what has already happened, but we can choose how we move forward.

We can choose better words.

We can listen before assuming.

We can apologise when we're wrong.

We can respect each other's feelings.

And we can give each other the time and space needed to understand things properly.

I'm not asking for a friendship without difficult days.

I'm hoping for a friendship where difficult days don't prevent us from communicating honestly.

A friendship where we can acknowledge that something hurt us and still treat each other with respect.

A friendship where we can learn from our mistakes without repeatedly using the past against each other.

And a friendship where we don't have to pretend everything is beautiful to recognise that the good things still matter.

We don't have to stay close because we feel guilty about the past. I hope we can continue building a healthy friendship because we understand each other better and genuinely value the connection we share.

Thank you for the memories we've created and the moments we've shared.

Thank you for being part of my life.

Whatever happens in the future, I hope we can both look back and know that we tried to treat each other with kindness, honesty, and respect.

I hope we can learn to communicate better, understand each other's feelings more deeply, and handle our differences more maturely.

And whenever a misunderstanding arises, I hope we'll remember that an honest conversation can be the beginning of understanding.

I don't want our friendship to be defined only by the moments when we misunderstood each other. I want us to remember the good, learn from the difficult, and move forward with greater understanding.

We don't have to be perfect.

We don't have to understand everything immediately.

We don't have to agree on everything.

But I hope we can continue learning how to treat each other better.

Because, to me, a meaningful friendship isn't about never experiencing difficulties.

It's about being able to communicate honestly, recognise our mistakes, respect each other's feelings, and make thoughtful choices about how we treat one another.

❤ My Birthday Wish for Our Friendship

Mythu, on your birthday, I wish you happiness, peace, and countless blessings. I pray that God guides you in every step of your life, protects your family, fulfils your dreams, and gives you strength through every difficult moment.

I also hope that the friendship we share can move forward with greater understanding, honesty, and maturity.

I hope we can have more happy memories, more meaningful conversations, more laughter, and more moments when we can simply enjoy each other's company without overthinking or misunderstanding one another.

I hope we can learn to appreciate each other's presence without taking it for granted.

I hope we can respect each other's space without immediately assuming that something is wrong.

And whenever something does go wrong, I hope we'll remember that we can talk about it and try to make things better.

I don't want our friendship to be perfect. I want it to be genuine, understanding, respectful, and meaningful to both of us. ❤

❤ One Last Thing I Want to Ask You, Mythu

Mythu, if you've read this entire letter and understood everything I've tried to express, I want to ask you something from the bottom of my heart.

If you read this letter and acknowledge what I've shared with you, I hope we will never separate from each other, at any moment or at any cost, and that we will remain the closest of friends to each other.

If you acknowledge this and feel the same way about our friendship, please send me just one word on WhatsApp: "Yes."

When I receive that "Yes" from you, I'll trust your acknowledgement, and I promise I won't ask you this kind of question again in the future. I'll take your response as reassurance that we both want to remain the closest of best friends to each other, forever and throughout our lives.

I don't want to keep asking you the same questions or repeatedly seek reassurance about our friendship. I want to learn to trust your words and feel secure in the understanding we share.

I hope that, from this point forward, we can trust each other, communicate openly, and continue being the closest best friends to each other, forever and infinity. ❤♾

Mythu, I'm not asking you to promise that we'll never have disagreements or that our lives will always remain the same. I simply hope that we will continue to value our friendship, communicate honestly, and treat each other with care and respect.

If we ever face another difficult moment, I hope we can remember this letter and choose understanding instead of assumptions, honest conversations instead of unresolved misunderstandings, and patience instead of reacting out of fear.

I hope that, as time passes, we can look back at this period and recognise how much we've learned about ourselves and about the importance of communicating with the people we care about.

We don't have to be perfect friends. We just have to keep learning how to be better friends to each other.

Thank you for being part of my life, Mythu.

Once again, Happy Birthday! ❤

May God bless you today, tomorrow, and throughout your life.

With love, care, and sincerity,
Your Ruba ❤

> Always wishing you happiness, peace, and beautiful memories. ♾❤
